Comments on Scene Aspects & Invokable Advantages

Aspects List

Aspects are a phrase, a quote, or a sentence that defines a truth about a character or a game truth in a number of games systems ranging from Risus, Fate, Houses of the Blooded, PDQ, Universalis, etc. This is a list of useful aspects that can be of use to narrators and players using these game system.

Advice for Good Aspects

- a good aspect should have both positive and negative elements
- a good aspect should be worded so that the player can invoke them for a bonus, and the narrator compel them for a fate point.

- a good aspect can reveal something that the character may not even know.

Comments on Scene Aspects & Invokable Advantages

(from Google+ community by Fred Hicks)

So as I said before, the principle is specificity yields better traction. By getting more specific than the one-word or short-phrase aspect, you've got more pieces-parts for folks to grab onto, more of a "spin" provided to the scene. There's nothing particularly wrong with the one-words; they're flavorless, but they're fast, and sometimes you want speed.

But some flavor can often be added simply by looking at the one-word and then asking "so... why?" -- and then incorporating the answer into the aspect name. This can take them beyond a single axis of application... which is good.

Quickly-written suggestions follow.

- Aspects on the scene:*

Alert (as in guards): Sharp-Eyed Guards; So Quiet You Could Hear a Pin Drop; No Gaps In Guard Rotation; They've Doubled Their Personnel

Poorly-Lit: Vague Shapes Hidden In Fog; Sparsely Placed Torches; Dark Deals, Dark Shadows; Murder in the Murk

Slippery: Ground Moves Underfoot; Can't Find Your Feet; Covered In Slick Ice

Noisy: Can't Hear Yourself Think; Constant Hum of Machinery; Loud Cheers and Angry Jeers; Jet Engines All Around

Windy: Gale Force Winds; Gusts Howling Through Narrow Streets; Wind-Whipped and Bitter-Chilled

- Aspects of advantage:*

Covered: Hidden Behind Ragged Chunks of Wall; All Exits Watched; Claimed the High Vantage Point

Blocked: Shield Wall Erected; A Punishing Gauntlet Awaits; None Shall Pass!

Shaken: Lost His Nerve; Broken Morale; Undermined Confidence; Can't Tell Which Way Is Up

Spotted: Caught Red Handed; Stuck Out In The Open; Painted by Laser Targeting; Center of the Bulls-Eye

Astonished: Rendered Speechless; Everything You Knew Was A Lie; Blind-Sided and Wide Open
